

THOMAS HEDLEY REYNOLDS, President of Bates College. A native of New York City, educated in New England, you have abandoned the cozy comforts of historical research for the more hazardous fields of college administration, well prepared for this change by service as a Tank Unit Commander and a staff historian for the American Red Cross. Active in community affairs, you have contributed much to the Maine Education Council, the governor's Committee on the Maine Partners of the Alliance for Progress, and the Arts Council of Lewiston-Auburn which you serve as a Trustee. A man of vision in the world of Maine higher education, you have argued persuasively and eloquently for the extension of cooperative efforts among Maine institutions, and those beginnings that have been made owe much to your inspiration. In the Maine way of looking at things, you are still a newcomer to these shores but your capacity for imaginative thought has already stamped you as a Yankee.

Honoris Causa, DOCTOR OF LAWS
