

ABRAM LEON SACHAR, President of Brandeis University. Born in New York, educated in Missouri and at Cambridge University in England, you have expertly created in New England a university of a stature belying its youth. Your noteworthy early career as historian and scholar, teacher and writer, and in the organization of the Hillel Foundation, was fulfillment in itself, before you were chosen fifteen years ago as the first President of a university yet to be born, and conceived as a contribution of the Jewish Community to American higher education. Your rare melding of intellect and business acumen, and your able administration, have made Brandeis surpass its most ambitious goals, in its stability of operation, in its financial support, in physical plant, and most important in the quality of faculty and student body. “Where there is no vision, the people perish.”

Honoris Causa, DOCTOR OF LAWS
