

WILLIAM GURDON SALTONSTALL, Principal of Phillips Exeter Academy, exemplifying the ideal headmaster described by Ian Hay as “...always cheerful even when alone; and he loves his work. If he did not, it would kill him....A man who can run a great...school, can run an empire.” – a leader in secondary school education, head of a great school – for the manner in which he has served his country and his country’s youth upholding the best traditions of each, on the one hundred and forty-seventh anniversary of an honorary degree to another member of his long noted family at the First Commencement of Bowdoin College.
