

EDWARD HOLYOKE SNOW, of the Class of 1914, native of Winn, product of Brunswick's public schools, Yankee schoolmaster transplanted to Pennsylvania, in the midst of his college years began his devotion to public education. Assuming a principalship even prior to his degree, his service in schools has been interrupted only for graduate work, and this year completes his forty-second as a school principal, the last thirty-three at the Armore Junior High School. Emulating his sturdy Maine forebears, he has pioneered, initiating early patterns of junior high school administration; like them, too, he has adhered to strict principles and stern disciplines for himself and for his pupils, well-tempered by wisdom and humanity. This is the heritage treasured by more than 25,000 students under his guidance at Ardmore alone. Absent from his own Commencement because of duty to his first principalship, he today is called from his last principalship to be honored at this Commencement.
