

GEORGE DAVID WOODS, internationalist and financier, as President of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, known more familiarly as the World Bank, you have done much to promote the economic development of newly emerging countries, and to revitalize that of old and moribund nations, bolstering their agriculture, their industry, and their education. Your skill as a financial trouble shooter based upon your long and rich experience and proved by your success in the most delicate of international negotiations, is rendered the more useful and effective by your adventurousness, your courage, and your willingness to be provocative as the occasion demands. Mankind around the world is in your debt.
