

WILLIAM HODDING CARTER, of Greenville, Mississippi, and Rockport, Maine; Bachelor of Arts of the Class of 1927; Honorary Master of Arts of Harvard University; in college a '68 prize speaker and winner of the Forbes Rickard Prize for Poetry; journalist and novelist; fearless editor who has not hesitated to contend against Huey Long in Louisiana and Senator Bilbo in Mississippi; patriotic editor of the Near Eastern edition of The Stars and Stripes; Pulitzer Prize winner for journalism in 1946; Southern by birth and heritage who fights for racial tolerance and understanding in his brilliant novel The Winds of Fear, well reviewed in England as in America, and in many an article read the country over; who on this twentieth anniversary of his class represents liberal principles; eager to do his task

Before the hair be gray or vigor die
And while the heart of youth still spurs to do.

Honoris Causa, DOCTOR OF LETTERS
