

EDMOND ESTEVE, Professor of French Literature in the University of Nancy, and a special lecturer at the University of Paris; who, coming to this country as Exchange Professor at Harvard, has given generously of his time to interpret in other colleges also the literary traditions of his country, and who has recently told here in eloquent and clear language of the position of Longfellow in France; gladly welcomed by a college that bears the name of a French Huguenot as a worthy and charming representative of La Belle France.

Honoris Causa, DOCTOR OF LETTERS
