

MARK VAN DOREN, a graduate of the University of Illinois, Professor of English at Columbia University; scholar whose biographies and studies are distinguished in American literary criticism; poet whose verses won the Pulitzer Prize; recently the author of a book on liberal education which is already a classic in its field and whose pages challenge attention even where they do not win universal academic approval; a critic who can also create, a poet and artist who can also criticize, who ties literature to the College and the College very firmly to the liberal arts, and who has himself become a citizen in the republic of human understanding.

Honoris Causa, DOCTOR OF LETTERS