Dear General.

I rec'd duly your kind favor of 18th inst with such enclosure, which latter I hand you herewith.

Chauncy evidently wrote when he was sick from hard work and a thorough drenching at the fire, and when he was depressed by his examination, or as he forcibly explains, when he was "mad" - knowing your feeling about the Andover drill, a distinction from instruction, he naturally turned at once to you. He has explained to me that he knew very well that he must get came social instead of official - He reproaches himself for carelessness and blundering, a certain ineptness in working what he knows, and blames only himself for writing κ for χ and χ for κ . It seems to me he cannot have in any other way to be prompt, precise, identical, exact, and complete, than by our being exacting, and so judge that in his best moods he does not complain of being crowded, certainly not of being over-crowded. We try to give a fair amount of work and hold the boys to it as Perkins put it "by promise and warning, by precept and by praise, but more than all by example" - Janin has begun by dropping other things and attending to business and does good work

75, instead of 60 as on an ordinary pen examination, but did not at first have it in mind and gave way to his reaction. He says further that he took advice about certain formative and significant endings and did not look them up, but it was a blind leading of the blind, for the examination called for those very things.

I found he had come into a better mood, gone to work on his Greek, taken advice from his teacher instead of his comrades as to the points to guard, and in fact I found that like a sensible boy he had anticipated my good advice and so my call be-

Dear General:

Owing to the removal of Genl. Brady, 2nd Asst P.M.G. there is a great flutter among the clerks in this department especially those in the contract division. Of course I'm affected in common with the rest and having no backing here write to you for advice.

There have been fifteen or twenty removals since the present Post Master General took charge, and there is to be a further reduction of thirty on the first of May next. This information is reliable.

Now Genl. can you not think of some way to prevent any harm coming to me should such a thing be contemplated? I have no reason whatever to believe that I'll be one of the victims, yet I can't throw off the dread of the bare possibility. I am in good standing; give the best of satisfaction; and am well thought of by all my superiors.

Let me hear from ^{you} please, General.
Love to all.

Truly yours,

Dear General

I inclose an official request for the relieving of Captain Godfrey - I have long contemplated such a request, but have delayed it out of a sense of toleration which is no longer a virtue -

My personal and official relations with Captain Godfrey are not agreeable and I cannot give him, or repose in him the confidence that should exist.

I do not think that he tries to carry out my ideas. - but rather to secure his own ways, — and to gain his own personal advantages; — and I have further the belief that he is lax in discipline — I do not think his personal or family influence is advantageous to Cadets. —

I submit there as my private reasons for a change — I think if Lieut M^r Glendon were put in charge of Cavalry instruction, and Lieut Galmore be given a Co-det company in Lieut McCle-monds place, everything would be for the better -

I have submitted this private note that you might be more fully informed of my views than I care to state officially -

With high Esteem

Very sincerely
