PLAN AND SCOPE

Report on the World's Fair Congress of Republics.

IT WILL BE SUBMITTED NEXT MONTH

When the General Committee Is to Meet at Washington.

The Congress Will Meet in 1893 and Contain Two Sets of Delegates—It Will Have No Direct Connection with the Exposition—Outline of the Objects of the Great Gathering.

The sub-committee appointed to consider the plan and scope of the work of the proposed World's Fair Congress of Republics completed a report yesterday which they will present to the General Committee that will meet in Washington next month.

The report recommends that the conference be held at the time of the Exposition of 1893, but not in connection with it; that it shall be composed of two sets of delegates, one to be appointed by the executives of the republics of the world on a basis of one delegate to every 5,000,000 population, while the other shall be composed of delegates from commercial, educational or industrial organizations "that express in their fundamental laws a devotion to the principles" of the American Declaration of Independence, together with invited delegates from nations not republics; the first mentioned body shall be the senate and the others the house of the congress.

The report, which has been indorsed by the full committee, was draughted by John Clark Kidpath, J.L.D., of Greencastle, Ind., and reads as follows:

THE REPORT IN FULL.

I. The name of the proposed conference shall be the Pan-Republic Congress.

II. The congress shall be held in such city of the United States as may be selected by the General Committee during the time of the Columbian Exposition of 1893, but shall have no necessary connection therewith.

III. The Congress shall consist of two bodies. One only shall be composed of delegates appointed by the governments of the various republics of the world on the basis of one delegate at large from each republic, and one delegate for every 5,000,000 of its citizens, and for every fraction thereof exceeding one-half that number.

The other body shall be composed of delegates from organizations in sympathy with free institutions, and of representatives from nations other than republics. The delegates and representatives last referred to shall be chosen in accordance with the following provisions:

1. They shall include the officers of such organizations highest in rank.

2. One delegate at large from such organizations.

3. One delegate for each 100,000 of the membership of these organizations, and one for each fraction thereof exceeding 50,000.

4. Representatives from nations other than republics shall be chosen on the basis of one at large from each of such nations, and one for each 5,000,000 of its citizens, or fractions of that number exceeding one-half.

5. The method of selecting and inviting the representatives from nations other than republics shall be determined by the Executive Committee of the proposed Pan-Republic Congress, subject to the limitation that these representatives shall be of the nationality which they represent.

IV. Those appointive delegates who receive their appointment from the executives of the various governments represented at the congress shall constitute a Council, senate or upper house of said congress, and shall bear such relation in general to the assembly as the Senate of the United States bears to the House of Representatives.

V. Those appointive delegates who shall be chosen by the various organizations in sympathy with free institutions, together with the invited representatives from the nations other than republics, shall constitute an assembly or lower house of the congress.

VI. The sessions of the congress, the manner of proceeding, etc., shall be in general analogy with the sessions and proceedings of dual legislative bodies in free countries.

THE GENERAL SCOPE.

VII. The general scope of the proposed congress shall be the consideration of the interests of free institutions and the best means of promoting the same among the nations.

VIII. By free institutions shall be understood such organic forms of human society as are derived from an enlightened popular will, are consistent with it, and are subservient to the interests and happiness of mankind.

IX. Institutions, whether free or despotic, are of three general kinds or classes. These are:

1. Civil or political institutions.
2. Social and educational institutions proper.
3. Religious institutions.

Institutions of the latter class as such shall not be represented in the proposed congress, nor shall questions of a religious nature be discussed therein.

X. In the consideration of civil or political institutions the congress shall deal with:

1. Such questions of constitutional and administrative reform among the nations as may be deemed promotive of the interests of public liberty, the rights of citizenship and the maintenance and extension of free institutions.

2. Such questions in particular as may promote the establishment of the principle of arbitration among all civilized States instead of the barbarous code of war.

3. Such questions as shall tend by their discussion to prevent or extinguish the severities and injustice of governments toward their subjects.

4. Such questions as may tend by their discussion to promote the disarmament of the nations, the dissolution of all standing armies and the substitution thereof of the rule of intelligence, morality and justice among the people of the earth.

5. Such questions as by their discussion may tend to promote and perfect international intercourse on terms of equality and justice.

6. Such questions as by their discussion may promote the principle of mutual advantage among the nations in trade and commerce.

7. Such questions as by their discussion may conduce to the diffusion of international intelligence.

8. Such questions as relate to the mental and intellectual welfare of the nations, as the same may be determined by wise provisions for the education of the citizen, the freedom of the press and the general diffusion of knowledge.

9. Such questions as relate to the physical welfare of mankind, as general sanitation, salutary quarantine and the encouragement of those branches of investigation which conduce to the discovery of new methods of prolonging and protecting human life.

10. Such questions in particular as by their discussion may tend to promote government of the people by the people and for the people as the best attainable form of civil and political organization known to men.

11. Such other questions relating to the general well-being of mankind as may suggest themselves to enlighten consideration in the interim between the present and the opening of the congress.

NEWARK, N. J. _____ 1891.

My Dear Sir:

Hon. Wm. H. Arnoux, Chairman of the General Committee, has instructed me to call a meeting of the full Committee of Two Hundred to take place at the Arlington Hotel, Washington, D. C. on Friday, April 10th, 1891, at 10 A. M.

The Committee on Plan and Scope have prepared their report and a copy of the same is enclosed with this. The other committees will report at this meeting. Arrangements for reduced fares are being made, and of this you will receive a later notice. This date has been selected for the reason that it is the centennial anniversary of the signing of the first patent under the United States laws by President Washington, and in recognition of the debt that free institutions owe to the great mechanical progress of the world as experienced in the past century. The congress will be in session for two days. During the evenings it is hoped that addresses will be delivered by eminent friends of popular government on the work in which this committee is engaged. The evening meetings will be public. It is earnestly hoped that you will be able to be in attendance at this meeting. If you cannot attend in person, you are authorized to appoint a proxy to represent you.

Genl C. C. Howard

Dear General

Some time ago I accidentally heard that you had become associated in the mission work in Elizabeth St. I am somewhat surprised that I did not hear of it earlier.

I think that perhaps I devoted something like ten or twelve years of my life to the work there beginning in Grand St near Broadway then going to the Cor of Elizabeth & Grand then to the building No 116 - Elizabeth St. At one time we lived in addition the Welsh Church in Chrystie St and had another work there at the same time.

When I married I was forced to leave New York and knowing that the work of Carmel Chapel was being conducted in Elm St in a very unpropitious place I endeavored them to move and consolidate their work with ours. The City Mission people who had been more or less associated with us and who took for us the name of Carmel Chapel wished to move into the Bazaar. I suggested a place which they secured and the Elm St folk had the full control of everything. This was perhaps 16 years ago.

During this time I have been knocked about considerably but during all this time my love

The need of true Christian influence were never more apparent than now and it is the common people more than any other who require the softening and refreshing influence of the Gospel. We have got to talk of other things and the mission school, the mission church, the carrying of Jesus Christ to the poor is after all the great good that it is desired to have done and it with is the end accomplish more than all the large political parades imagined. With a hope that all the money we require may be forthcoming speedily I am Sincerely, Yours
Henry H. H. H.

I enclose paper of my own which perhaps may interest you for the work that I was able by God's help to do at that locality has never ceased. I would be glad at any time to be back again but that I never could ever be. There has not a day passed in all these years that I have not remembered the mission there and I ~~have~~ never have ceased to pray that God would bless it. I have perhaps given less to the work and its support than I should have done since I have been called away, but it has been simply because I could not do it - and because calls were made upon me from other sources and because of a large family growing up around me. I send herewith a check for $50.00. I hope to be able to add to it by and by - I wish I could to-day multiply it by 100 - and place your work on a strong financial basis at once - I have a box somewhere it contains some pennies and I think some postal currency that was contributed years ago by five or three little folks for "building purposes" I will hunt it up and forward it to you - whether the amount be big or little I do not apprehend that it amounts to much still it is the identical money contributed at the time.

I would now perhaps be able to do better if it were not that at the latter part of this month I am responsible for a patriotic gathering to be held at Chicago. To the furtherance of this work I have devoted the last three and a half years and I trust that something may be accomplished now towards awakening the American people to the great dangers that menace our land.

General Howard's Loss.

A distressing experience of pecuniary loss has come to General O. O. Howard, the genial commander of the division of the Atlantic of the United States army. Soon after he took up his quarters at Governor's Island, he engaged with his son in mission work in one of the worst quarters of lower New-York. For several months they have been holding a Sunday school and other services in a low and shabby room over a stable in Elizabeth street. The work developed so much interest and promise that General Howard determined to buy, if possible, a little Welsh chapel in Chrystie street, and had collected something over $2,000 for the purpose. The money was deposited with a friend of the general's, who failed in business and lost it in the wreck of his own fortunes. General Howard is by no means a rich man, but he has stated publicly that no part of the sum shall be lost to the object for which it was subscribed, even if he is obliged to pay every cent of it out of his own pocket.

without the least appearance of ceremony to a vacant part of the hall, took off his rich cloak, folded and placed it under him for a cushion on the floor, his noble all following his example. In this posture they ate of the dishes set before them after which with apparent satisfaction they walked out of the hall, leaving the cloaks behind them on the floor. The emperor, who had admired their whole behavior, sent a courtier to inform the duke of his supposed negligence. "Return to your master," answered Duke Robert, "and tell him that it is not the custom of the Normans to carry about with them the seats which they used at an entertainment."

On his way back from the East, Duke Robert was taken ill, and was so feeble that he was obliged to be carried in a litter. His company secured the service of a number of Moorish slaves as bearers. The Normans regarded these pagan bondmen with great contempt. One day, a knight returning from his pilgrimage overtook Duke Robert's train, and he
