Some weeks ago we wrote asking if you would write us an article on "Young Men in the Public Service" - an article of 2000 words. You replied that you would do so for $50. Dear General:

I enclose the letter concerning the medal of honor of which I spoke to you. After receiving the original letter from General Lockman, I forwarded it to General Schuy and he has given his endorsement on the last sheet.

The item relating to Chancellor's case, I had incorporated at General Lockman's suggestion, as this did not occur under your own or General Schuy's supervision, I do not see how it can get other endorsement than that of General Lockman.

Hoping that I am not putting you to too great inconvenience, I am General,
Sincerely yours,
J. W. Albion

I have the honor to request, that a Medal of Honor, as provided for in the Act of March 3rd 1863, be awarded to Thomas W. Osborn, who was Captain of Co. " D " 1st New York Light Artillery and Chief of Artillery of the 2nd Division, 3rd Corps, General Berry, at the battle of Chancellorsville, May 1 - 3 1863; and the same officer, then Major of the same regiment, and Chief of Artillery of the 11th Corps, General Howard, at the battle of Gettysburg, July 1 - 3 1863, in consideration of specific services performed in one or both of those battles.

I am informed, that at the battle of Chancellorsville, in the evening of May 2nd 1863, following the repulse of the 11th Corps, when General Berry's division was ordered to the front, that Captain Osborn placed two guns of Co. " H " 1st U. S. Artillery, on the plank road in line with the infantry of Berry's division, and the remainder of his four batteries on an elevation 400 yards in rear of the line of battle, for the purpose of checking the advance of Jackson's command. Berry gave his chief of artillery entire freedom to employ the artillery, as he should deem best, to successfully check the advance of the enemy. The main body of Jackson's command was checked by the artillery fire from these guns at Dowdal's Tavern, early in the evening, where its suffering and losses, as shown by the Confederate reports, were very severe. Jackson's command did not come into collision with Hooker's line of battle that night, but remained beyond the range of musketry fire. This service was performed by Captain Osborn without specific orders from any superior officer, and, as an important incident of that battle, was of great value.

July On the evening of the first, and on the 2nd and 3rd of July 1863, Major Osborn was in command of the artillery of the 11th Corps and other batteries of the reserve artillery, on Cemetery Hill. In the afternoon of the 3rd, during the heavy cannonading by the enemy preceding the assault of Pickett's and other confederate divisions, a large percentage of the fire was concentrated upon Cemetery Hill. When the cannonading by the enemy had continued a considerable time, Major Osborn requested General H. J. Hunt, Chief of Artillery of the Army, to direct the artillery of the army to cease firing, with the view of inducing General Lee to develop his plan of attack. General Hunt replied that the suggestion was a good one, accepted it and at once acted upon it. While Major Osborn directed his batteries to cease firing, General Hunt gave orders for

The main body of Jackson's command was checked by the artillery fire from these guns at Dowdell's farm, early in the evening, where its suffering and losses, as shown by the Confederate reports, were very severe. Jackson's command did not come into collision with Hooker's line of battle that night, but remained beyond the range of musketry fire. This service was performed by Captain Osborn without any orders from any superior officer, and, as an important incident of that battle, was of great value.

In the afternoon of the 3rd, during the night, the enemy proceeding the assault of Fisher's and other Confederate divisions, a large percentage of the force was concentrated upon Cemetery Hill. When the command of the 11th Corps had continued a considerable time, Major Osborn reported to General H. J. Hunt, Chief of Artillery of the Army, to direct the artillery of the Army to cease firing, with the view of inducing General Lee to develop his plan of attack. General Hunt replied that the suggestion was a good one, and ordered it not to be done upon it. While Major Osborn directed his batteries to cease firing, General Hunt gave orders for the batteries on the entire line to cease. Upon cessation of the fire, Lee at once sent forward Pickett's command to his great charge in which he was defeated and the battle quickly won.

It is upon the fact that Osborn originated and first proposed the cessation of the fire, that his suggestion was the one acted upon and that as a result was the quick winning of the battle that this request is made.

My dear Sir:--

I have a college preparatory school of about a hundred and seventy-five boys, and it has been my hope for several years to have them look into the face of and listen to the words of some one, at least, of the men who fought through the great War of the Rebellion and secured the unity of our government. I am confident that it will be a great inspiration, if my boys can see and hear such a man. We are all keenly aware that these great men are rapidly passing away, and it becomes all the more necessary, if my hope is to be realized, to take early steps to secure the presence of such a man in our school.

I send you a catalogue of the school, which will describe somewhat to you its character and standing. You will see very honored names connected with it. Will you kindly write me on what terms you can visit the school and make an address on some episode of the war in which you were yourself a part. I would prefer to have the address come in the evening.

Allow me to say in passing that we have no charges for admission to such addresses, which are of annual occurrence in the

Dear M:—

I am planning for a grand meeting of our "Association of American Authors" in this historic old City, where Hawthorne, Prescott, Bowditch, and Story once lived and labored.

The time will be the first week in May, the exact date to be made known later by our Association Secretary.

The American Association, or such members as can attend, will be the guests of the THOUGHT AND WORK CLUB, a literary organization of some 250 ladies. Those coming from a distance will be hospitably entertained by our members and their friends.

Our Club will tender the guests a Complimentary "Authors' Breakfast."

Our former President, Col. Higginson, and our present President, General Wilson, Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, and others have promised to be with us.

We hope to make it a memorable occasion, and the novel idea seems to meet with general approval.

Such a gathering cannot be otherwise than helpful, and we trust that we may greet you here.

Kindly send me word as soon as possible, if you can arrange to be present.
