Dear General:-

The Elgin engagement was made last year. No subject has been selected. I enclose a pamphlet giving an outline of the celebration. I suggest that you take for a subject anything that you think will be appropriate. How would it do to take "War and Peace", drawing in part from your lecture on the "Warfare of the Future"?

Correspondence has been had with W.S. Weld, Room 5 Spurling Block, Elgin.

Miss Pearson is to be in the programme.

Very truly yours,

Enclosure.

I suggest that you take a quick view of the figures and let me know if there will be any change in the line of the War and Peace "agreeable to part from your teaching on the "Writings of the Future."

Correspondence has been had with W. W. Yale. Room 6, 8th.

My dear Ross,

Your son of the 6th is just at hand. We are glad to hear that you reached home safely. Though sorry to learn of your four days delay at Rutland.

You need not express gratitude for any little thing we ever did for you. Your obligation is all on our side. It was a delight to all of us to hear you write us. And we hope the time is not for distant when you will flood our home again. With a kind remembrance to all your dear family.

FROM WILBUR T. AYRES,
Instructor in Latin, DePauw University.

GREENCASTLE, IND., NOVEMBER 12, 1895.

A few months ago I purchased the so-called "Standard" Dictionary and wrote a testimonial after a superficial examination of it. I now have Webster's International and deem it far superior after a careful comparison of the two. In fact they are a contrast. The more I examine the International the more its merits are evident. It excels in the systematic and logical arrangement of the words and definitions and the exclusion of those that should have no place in good English and in a good dictionary.

Especially is it superior in its etymology and eminently so in the definitions and in its system of indicating pronunciation. In these points the contrast between the two books was a revelation to me. For accuracy, simplicity, and reliability I want the International and can now give without any mental reservation an unqualified indorsement to this, the best of all.
FROM

REV. WILLARD G. SPERRY, D. D.,

PRESIDENT OLIVET COLLEGE.

OLIVET, MICH., NOVEMBER 25, 1895.

The International satisfies me. The diacritical marks are intelligible. The work is condensed to one volume not too large to be usable. Some of the vast dictionaries should have a linguistic wrecking train run through them to carry off thousands of needless words. I am thankful for the sober, wise scholarship which excludes sensational features.
THE CHRISTIAN STANDARD.
CINCINNATI, Ohio, May 2, 1896.

For thirty years Webster’s Dictionary has been the standard in this office, and it was a favorite word with the founder of the Standard that when he could find a thing no where else he always went to Webster. Gigantic efforts have been made to wrest the supremacy from this dictionary, and immense works have been produced that are models of scholarship and literary resources. We have no thought of a word of disparagement for any of them, but with all their infinite detail they leave Webster, in its great INTERNATIONAL EDITION without a rival as a useful dictionary for all classes. They are wonderful in dress parade, but for active service Webster has no fellow.

I take pleasure in saying that I am delighted with the "International Dictionary." During the last three months I have carefully compared it with the "Standard," and, as a result of this comparison, the International now occupies the place in my dictionary holder formerly occupied by the other.

Can you arrange something definite at the Telegraph Station like me at Delawar Q.?
#15 Lake Place, New Haven, Conn. June 7, 1876.

Majr Gen. C. C. Howard,

My dear Sir:

I do not wish to seem unappreciative of your very kind letter of the 14th ult. which was duly received. I hoped to meet you while you were in New Haven, and made some effort to do so; but with a feeling of reluctance to bring up, on such an occasion, the subject of my letter, I have found that any attempt to deal with these facts in a conversation has been unsatisfactory hitherto, and I have afterward reverted to it with a feeling that I had not made my meaning clear. Hence I questioned the value of another discussion, at this time, and was not as persistent in seeking an interview as I otherwise should have been.

The question is wholly one of figures and unquestionable facts: and if these have no weight in themselves and by their bare statement, it is useless to go into a discussion over them.

For two years past I have tried to bring facts and figures of this dict to the attention of the men who have been regularly chosen to look after their missionary interests, and have been somewhat surprised to find them treated as of no particular significance.

It is surely a novel explanation of any apparent dissatisfaction, to refer it to the mercenary spirit of our Congregational pastor, as that "Pastors naturally are apt to complain because in a measure their own salaries often depend upon the contributions." My observation, in a ministry of over twenty years, has led me to think that the devotion of ministers to missionary causes was far in advance of that of their people. Many ministers of my acquaintance, with small salaries, have sacrificially set apart a tenth to benevolent objects. Often they have contributed from their own means, more than any one else in the Congregation, and that too when they had not a few wealthy parishioners. In many cases they have urged these misson.
any causes against objections from influential men in the church, and met with sharp criticism on this account; and all that they needed to do to have missionary contributions drop to a very low figure was to do nothing.

There are some ministers who do take this latter course, but I have not observed that there were particularly dissatisfied with the management of missionary societies. More commonly, they have no interest in them whatsoever, not knowing much about them, and caring still less.

But I have known priests, whose ministry was full of interest in these causes and who sacrificed not a little in their behalf, and taught their people the blessedness of such sacrifices. And there have expressed dissatisfaction at having their contributions returned to them in printed matter for the waste paper basket, or used in other ways as profits.

Pardon me for speaking of this.
But I find myself in renewing your partly worded and with mission arid—though I have to confess that Executive Committees and Secretaries are somewhat beyond my comprehension.

Thanking you again for your very kind and courteous letter I am

Very Truly Yours

G. S. Dibberman,
Dear Gen. Howard:

Your letter of the 6th. inst. received. I had already written you quite fully in regard to the lecture and the fact that I had to bear the burden of the expenses of the advertisement, hall etc. The rent of the hall is $100 a night but they charged me only $50.

I did not write you earlier as I understood from you that you would be absent from Burlington about two weeks from the time you were here, so that I hoped that my letter would reach your home about the time you reached there.

I do not know that I can add anything in this letter that I omitted in my last one giving you a statement of the result of the lecture, and suggesting that next fall we be allowed to try our hand again--believing that our recent experience will operate greatly to our advantage.

With best wishes for you and your family,

I remain,

Very truly yours,

Dear Sirs,

I have received your letter of the 2nd instant, and I have endeavored to do all in my power to expedite the examination of the papers relative to the different affairs of the Railroad and the name.

And I have not been able to do so, due to the pressure of the examination. I will see my client in the fall of the year.

Enclose the papers.

I am not aware of your position as a mediator, but you are not engaged in this matter to the extent that I know. I hope that you will attend to the papers as soon as possible.

Very truly yours,

James H. Merriweather
