

Incidents.

No.38 Volume 9.

Subject:

Hon. John Randolph of Roanoke. - Quick wit.

1
2
3
4
5
6
7
8

No. 38 Volume 9.

Subject:

Hon. John Randolph of Roanoke. - Chief.

Honorable John Randolph of Roanoke.----- An example of quick repartee.

John Randolph at the time of this incident was a member of the lower House of Congress. He had a voice as shrill as McKinley's and as sharp as <sup>Blaine's</sup> ~~Blaine~~. In debate he often made personal enemies when he least expected to do so. But he was proud and at times haughty in his deportment outside of Congress.

On one occasion he ridiculed a rough burly man from a Western state. This man was very muscular and terrible as an enemy. A little after this quarrel began, Mr. Randolph was moving along Pennsylvania Avenue on the north side walk, which was at that time much narrower than it is at present. He suddenly saw coming toward him the fierce Westerner, and the Westerner saw him.

As they approached the Westerner cried out :

"I never get out of the way for a dog." Randolph jumped into the ditch, took off his hat, and in the shrillest tone, as he made a low bow, <sup>shouted</sup> answered: "I always do!"

It is ~~little~~ <sup>in that fighting mood,</sup> wonderful that no duel resulted from this; but it is probably due to the humor of the situation. Every body said it is impossible to get ahead of John Randolph of Roanoke in ~~repartee~~ <sup>repartee</sup>.

Low words

Honorable John Randolph of Roanoke.----- An example of quick reporting.

John Randolph at the time of this incident was a member of the lower House of Congress. He had a voice as shrill as McKinley's and as sharp as blades. In debate he often made personal attacks when he least expected to do so. But he was proud and at times haughty in his deportment outside of Congress.

On one occasion he ridiculed a rough butly man from a Western state. This man was very unclean and terrible as an enemy. A little after this quarrel began, Mr. Randolph was moving along Pennsylvania Avenue on the north side walk, which was at that time much narrower than it is at present. He suddenly saw coming toward him the fierce Westerner, and the Westerner saw him.

As they approached the Westerner cried out :

"I never get out of the way for a dog." Randolph jumped into the ditch, took off his hat, and in the shrillest tone, as he made a low bow, answered: "I always do!"
It is little wonderful that no duel resulted from this, but it is probably due to the humor of the situation. Every body said it is impossible to get ahead of John Randolph of Roanoke in reporting.