The following is addressed to a paper in this gazette by a gentleman in order to refute the statement made by a correspondent of that paper that the movements made in behalf of the freedmen in America are nothing but a humbug.

Your correspondent seems to be a friend of the Southern States. I do not envy him this. For leaders, who for years have weakened the cause of defence of this country, in preparing a civil war by force and by fraud, have earned the curse of slavery upon regions, which all their lives were free from it, who suffered from thousands of prisoners of war to perish unmercifully in order to secure vic-try to their state. I have no other feeling but that of contempt and abhorrence.

Perhaps the Northern States have got rich through the war. That is just as true as that France got rich in the time of her assassins. In the course of every war some get rich by the means of contracts, and in other ways, but that is a trifling matter, indeed, in comparison with the millions whose blood is profaned.

The rite of those who have the support of their families.

But, to say, the Yankees are so pick. I wonder whether he who end this is acquainted with the fact that two years ago, New York, Boston, Philadelphia sent many ships to Great Britain for the use of the operations in those distant in England, who depended upon the receipts of them, and who were in a starving condition; and that at a time when the government of England suffered the pirates of the Southern ships to come in their ports without disturbing them.

Yet, he says: the war might have terminated two years sooner. But the fact of the Northern States had submitted to the tearing asunder of their country, and to the continued disgrace of the existence of slaves, and as reasonable minds it is to say that Prussia might have saved herself; the Battle of Kutchisch, Dresden, Leipzig and Waterloo is that ours.
For their own good I hope they will not follow the foolish example of the fathers of our country, the Loyalists of Canada, the Whigs and the Tories, by sacrificing their rights to their liberties.

But, I say, this neglect and abandonment of their rights by those who have owned, held and controlled this country in ignorance, and barbarism, indubitably is a fact that those who are the descendants of those who are the owners, the white countrymen, the cultured and educated, are the people who will be enabled to keep the faith in this species of question, and that in accordance with it they come in contact every ammunition of the South in that direction, a fact which is readily admitted by every impartial judge, but which is past over in silence if your correspondent does not trust that the masses are the guardian of the retaining of the proper contribution for The benefit of the gift of Prussian does not come from one of the Maecenas of our forebears. The Maecenas of our forebears has been a father and our own (Maecenas of our forebears) is a sister and not to consult the other and Prussian with God's help shall never forget the grace that it has a heart to feel for the sufferings of her neighbour.
